

2023 Annual Superannuation Performance Test Frequently asked questions

What is the Annual Superannuation Performance Test (performance test)?

The Australian Prudential Regulation Authority (APRA) is required to conduct the performance test annually for registered super funds.

The performance test reviews assessable investment options where the Super Trustee decides the investment strategy (via its investment manager) against set benchmarks that reflect each investment option's Strategic Asset Allocation (SAA).

An investment option's SAA is designed by its investment manager. They set targets for how much they allocate to each asset class they invest in, and make sure the SAA continues to be met over time.

The performance test result indicates how well the Super Trustee's investment decisions for a particular investment option has performed against the benchmark tailored to that option's SAA. This helps members understand how their fund's investment options are performing.

How long has APRA been testing superannuation products?

APRA has been testing MySuper options since 2021. This is the first year they have expanded the test to include other investment options, as well as MySuper options.

How did other super funds perform in the performance test?

The full results of the 2023 performance test are available at apra.gov.au/annual-superannuation-performance-test.

Why did some Bendigo Super investment options not pass the performance test?

There are several contributing factors as to why some of our investment options did not pass the performance test.

Global stress continues to drive challenging investment market conditions. Ongoing effects of COVID-19 and resultant lockdowns, along with the war in Ukraine have caused supply-chain disruptions, further contributing to rising inflation.

Given the challenging market conditions and risks to the economy, particularly since early 2022, we positioned investment options defensively and held less shares than the neutral SAA. Doing so meant choosing to invest in lower risk asset class exposures including cash, fixed income and alternatives rather than maintaining higher risk share exposure.

This came from both our tactical tilts; where we underweighted Australian and overseas equities through most of the past financial year and increased our exposure to alternative strategies. It resulted in underperformance as share markets returned more favourably than we anticipated.

Additionally, we note several of our active investment managers experienced underperformance against their benchmarks. The underperformance from our Australian and global equity managers over the test period have combined to reduce returns.

Our defensive positioning means that while we continue to be committed to meeting our long-term return objectives, we have underperformed against the performance test benchmarks.

What is Bendigo Super doing to improve?

Changes have been made to some of our active managers in the overseas equities' asset class within all Wholesale funds. We will continue to review active manager performance, aiming to add new active managers and eliminate those who consistently underperform.

In addition, new alternatives strategies and a new credit strategy have been added within all Wholesale funds.

We will continue to monitor our investment mix adjustments as measured against the performance test benchmarks for each investment option that has failed the test. This includes reviewing adjustments to our SAAs, as well as more tactical asset allocation shifts.

We will continue to shift our tactical asset allocations, responding to current market conditions with the objective of adding to returns and reducing risk through time, for all investment options.

What is Bendigo MySuper?

Bendigo MySuper is a lifecycle investment strategy for members who prefer not to make an investment choice. The strategy is focussed on 3 age-based life stages, each with their own investment option that changes automatically as you age. Moving you from higher risk with potentially higher return investments while you are younger, through to more defensive investments and reducing your risk as you get closer to retirement.

The Bendigo MySuper option has consistently passed the performance test since the test began in 2021.
